WHAT ARE WE SEEING AROUND THE WORLD THIS WEEK?

Yoghurt meets the GLP-1 shopper.

Protein yoghurt is now being built for people on GLP-1 drugs. Lactalis launched Ratio Pro Fibre in the US with high protein and added fibre, and Danone says Oikos demand is outrunning its production. Here, Greek yoghurt has been running short on supermarket shelves on the back of TikTok demand. Milk prices are rising across Fonterra, Müller and Burra Foods, so input costs are heading up.

GLP-1 US

Lactalis launches Ratio Pro Fibre for GLP-1 users

Lactalis USA launched a yoghurt made for GLP-1 drug users, combining high protein with added fibre.

Why it matters: Protein plus fibre in one pot is the new formula for this shopper. The Cultured Farmer can add a third reason to buy that Ratio does not lead with: live cultures.

YOGHURT AUSTRALIA

Greek yoghurt runs short in Australian supermarkets

SBS reports Greek yoghurt shortages on Australian shelves linked to viral TikTok demand, alongside cult demand for Coconut Cult's premium coconut yoghurt.

Why it matters: Demand for thick, high-protein yoghurt is outrunning supply in Australia. Reliable supply is a selling point to take to the buyers.

PROTEIN YOGHURT US

Danone names new US leadership as Oikos demand outruns supply

Danone named Francois Lacombe president of Danone U.S. for an 'offensive phase', as demand for Oikos protein yoghurt outpaces production and customer service.

Why it matters: Even Danone cannot make enough protein yoghurt. The category is still in a growth phase worth backing.

COTTAGE CHEESE NZ HERALD / CANADIAN GROCER

Cottage cheese demand still outruns supply

Viral high-protein TikTok recipes keep outpacing cottage cheese supply. DFA's Walmart-exclusive high-protein brand Mulu is one branded response.

Why it matters: Cotti's category is still supply-short and creator-driven. DFA building its own brand shows the big players want in.

Müller and Myprotein widen their tie-up with protein yoghurt mixers

Müller Yogurt & Desserts has extended its partnership with Myprotein into a wider range of high-protein yoghurt mixers.

Why it matters: The Müller and Myprotein tie-up keeps adding formats. A sign that co-branding with a sports name is working in protein dairy.

PROTEIN COSTS JUST-FOOD

Glanbia signals more price rises as whey costs stay high

Glanbia says it will keep raising prices while whey protein input costs remain elevated.

Why it matters: Whey stays expensive. Protein that comes naturally from the milk, as in cottage cheese and strained yoghurt, is a cost advantage worth talking up.

SKYR JUST-FOOD

Lactalis brings Siggi's Skyr to the UK as 'clean protein'

Lactalis is launching Siggi's Skyr in the UK, moving the message from protein percentage to 'clean protein'.

Why it matters: The language is shifting from protein numbers to 'clean protein'. A cue for how The Cultured Farmer talks about its own protein.

Danone's Activia has refreshed its brand and launched a Proactive line as probiotic claims multiply across the category.

MILK PRICES FONTERRA/FARMERS GUARDIAN/BURRA FOODS

Milk prices rise together for November

Fonterra in New Zealand, Müller in the UK, Dairygold and Lakeland Dairies in Ireland, and Burra Foods in Australia all lifted November farmgate milk prices.

NUTRITION DAIRYREPORTER

Study links plant-based dairy swaps to nutrient gaps

UK modelling finds replacing dairy with plant alternatives sharply raises iodine inadequacy. Researchers want fortification made mandatory, not voluntary.

Why it matters: New evidence backs the nutrition case for real dairy over plant alternatives. Useful context for any 'real dairy' message.

REUSABLE TUB THE DIELINE

Lala Crema adds a writing panel to its reusable tubs

Lala worked with Conciergency and Zurda Mexico to add a writable surface to its sour cream tub, because households often reuse the tubs for food storage.

How we'd use it: Pay homage to it by designing The Cultured Farmer tubs for their second life in the fridge, so the brand stays on show after the yoghurt is gone.

HERITAGE THE DIELINE

J&J Dairy revives its 1948 flag for a bolder comeback

M/OTG redesigned the heritage kosher dairy brand by reviving an old red flag device, with bold white serif lettering and oversized product names.

How we'd use it: Pay homage to it by building one simple, ownable device that carries the farm story across every Cotti and yoghurt pack.

FORMAT THE DIELINE

Moozy moves milk into a can

Moozy swapped the carton and bottle for a can, a structural change that sparked debate in The Dieline's round-up.

How we'd use it: Pay homage to the idea when testing a Cultured Farmer drink: a can stands out in a fridge full of cartons and bottles.

Small & Mighty: the GLP-1 mini-meal drink

$4.50 single · $14 4-pack

A 200ml chilled dairy 'mini meal' built for the 1 in 10 Aussies on GLP-1s and anyone eating less: 25g protein, 8g fibre, a stack of the micronutrients people miss when appetite drops, low sugar, small enough to actually finish. Made at the dairy JV, three flavours (vanilla bean, choc malt, coffee). Phase two: 120g spoonable pots.

EY says one in ten Aussie adults are on a GLP-1 right now and they're cutting snacks and soft drink but buying more protein and health food. The UK supermarkets built ranges for this in January and nobody in Woolies or Coles has done a proper chilled one yet, so this is our shelf to take.

Pack idea: Small, soft-edged squat bottle that looks deliberately smaller than a protein shake, with a 'clinical with soul' label: clean nutrient grid and one warm hand-drawn mark.
